They're doing a bad job. I like to revisit things after having owned or used them for three to six months. I have been using my Rancilio Silvia almost every day for almost five years, and I have not yet written a follow-up of my first posts! I have a draft for a post that I started somewhere around six months, but I completely failed to finish it! My Rancilio Silvia suffered her first hardware failure, so this seems like the appropriate time to write about how she's holding up! One Month With My Rancilio Silvia in patshead. One of your thermometers is in fashion! I woke up one day, and she was cold. There is a terrible person, because I let Miss Silvia work 24 hours a day. I don't like waiting for her to warm up when I want a latte! I had some home automation © However, it was too powerful for the remote takeover in which I had turned it on, so I had to remove it. I moved your boats. I could turn on the vaporizer, and it would warm up, but it wouldn't get to the temperature of the beer. That means I have a bad 100C thermometer. They have none on Amazon, so I ordered one on the espressoparts. with. I didn't want to wait for a coffee © With milk! It was going to take many days for the replacement theristor to arrive, because I noticed the failure on a Friday. I was impatient. Can I get the temperature close enough to pull an espresso, manually turning off the vaporizer when it reaches the boiling temperature? I have an infrared thermometer, so I had to try it. That failed. The steam reached 140 degrees Celcius before my thermometer even passed the 60 degrees. This seemed a bore, but I swore I heard the 100-degree thermometer click on a point. So I turned off the vaporizer, and I ran some water through the machine. As the temperature crossed the boiling threshold was cooling, the heating light of Miss Silvia began to flicker! I've never seen him do that.But it did not take long before he came in solid. She was working very well, and I was going to be able to make my latte! She has worked well since then. The replacement thermistor is here now, but I will not put it. I'll wait until it really fails. How many shots do you think I pulled before this failure? I took many shots. There is a ton of literal shots, but I bet more than 10 espresso galões have passed this machine until now! She is also heating water almost without stopping for years. I think she's fine. Much better than $ 100 and $ 200 false café machines that I possess, for sure! In the early days, I was doing double shots. For years, I was taking triple shots. Due to some medical problems, my doctor made me stop drinking milk during three or four months last year, so I turned off the machine for two or three months. I should not be drinking big triple-hot latests more, so I'm back to pull the doubles again. It does not matter if I'm pulling a double or triple. I would tell as a single tug! A few days drink more than one. Some days I do café for my wife or for friends. Sometimes I pull a bad shot, and I have to repeat the process. Then there are other days when I'm not at home. I can be out of town. Maybe you're busy. These are the days when I just can not take any shot. I would not be surprised if I had arrived close to a day of almost one push every day for the last five years. This can have more than 1,800 tugs. A failure of a part of $ 12 after more than 1,500 pulls and tens of thousands of hours of operation is incredible! Is it that it counts as operation if the machine is fed and heating while I am not using it? A month with my rancilio Silvia in Patshead.com enough to talk about failure. How are Miss Silvia working? Miss Silvia was fantastic. I had to your rubber seal on your portafilter a few times. I waited a long time on the first firstand became solid and fragile, so it was extremely difficult to remove; He had to go in pieces. From now on, I'm doing it once a year. You can get a kit with a fresh and clean screen and a new rubber joint for about $ 15. It's easy to replace. I made some minor updates. I bought a bottomless portafilter and a triple basket. I also have a manan that the bolts in the original portafilter. The bottomless portafilter is fantastic. This helps me see what was wrong with my shots of café express as they are pulling. You can also observe the color of the photos more clearly, so you can stop pulling while the shot is blond. Most people do not need a manan, but I like to use baked. Baked à € à € à €
