Writing a Literature Review

1 Introduction

A literature review is an explanation, often referred to as a critique, of published work that is relevant to your project or research. However, it is important that you comment on what you have read and compare the findings of different authors. It is an opportunity for you to gain additional knowledge in the area of your research and show that you understand the theoretical background to your project. It also provides you with an opportunity to show where there are gaps in the research that has been undertaken and in turn demonstrates how your project may fill any such gaps. In large works, such as a PhD thesis, the Literature Review is usually presented as a single chapter. In a final year project, it will most likely be included in your introductory chapter, which you could entitle 'Introduction and Background'.

When undertaking a PhD the main reasons for searching the literature before starting any research is to avoid duplicating research that has already been undertaken and to determine areas that need additional research. For final year projects, searching the literature and writing a review demonstrates your ability to source material, which is a skill that will be of benefit to you in the work place. In addition, writing, in your own words, about the material you have read will show your supervisor that you have the ability to understand academic papers in your field of study and summarise what you have read.

The length of your literature review will ultimately depend on the size of your report, which is likely to relate to the number of modules credited to it. Before starting your project, it is important that you discuss with your supervisor his or her expectations and requirements relating to your written report. You should also determine whether there is a departmental template or any specifications to which you must adhere.

What is a scientific paper called.

Morguefile This type of cardboard usually has two thin outer layers of paper, with a sheet of paper in the center. The cardboard boxes are made of corrugated cardboard because it is an incredibly robust and durable type of paper. Because the corrugated cardboard is rigid, it can be difficult to cut. Use a sharp craft knife and a ruler for the best cutting results. Cardboard boxes can be made in toy houses, cars, spaceships and even furniture. You're only limited by your imagination. The center of the flute can be used in scrap bookkeeping and card making. Paper editor Antalis McNaughton really knows how to stand out from the crowd - by teaming up with design agency Stocks Taylor Benson for an innovative mailing campaign, which wraps up this week. The Decades of Design campaign aimed to capture the attention of designers by focusing on the typography, architecture, fashion and graphic design of each decade between the 1930s and 1990s. He then showed them to great effect using different printing techniques, finishes and samples of Antalis McNaughton's creative role. The aim of the campaign was to show how the creative use of paper and printing can help designers, agencies and their clients stand out in a world of communication by creating something unusual and tactile, and it has been worked on. Antalis McNaughton has received a lot of positive feedback from designers who received the email shots, which has resulted in increased sales of papers from the company's Creative Books range. It is necessary to locate sources, use academic data and show scientific examples. Before you start, you will need guidelines on how to write a research article.Start the research processBefore you start writing the research article, you should do your research. It is important that you understand the topic, formulate the ideas of your work, believe your thesis, and learn to speak about your given topic in an authoritative way. You will search online databases, encyclopedias, almanacs, journals, books, newspapers, government publications, reports, guides and academic resources. Take notes as you discover new information about your given topic. Also keep a record of the references you use so you can build your bibliography later and cite your resources.When you organize your research work, the thesis is where you explain to your readers what to expect, present your statements, answer any questions you have been asked, or explain your interpretation of the topic you are researching. Therefore, the thesis should be strong and easy to understand. Your thesis must also be accurate. He must answer the question that has been assigned to him, and there must be an opportunity for him to oppose or discuss his position. The body of your manuscript should support your thesis, and should be more than a generic.Create a SchemaMany teachers require sketches during thepaper writing process. You'll find that they want to set up outlines with a title page, summary, introduction, research of research paper and reference section. The title page typically consists of the student's name, the university name, the class name and the paper date. The summary is a summary of the paper. An introduction usually consists of one or two pages and comments on the subject of the research document. In the body of the research document, you will break it into materials and methods, results and discussions. His references are in his bibliography. Use an example of research paper to help you with your scheme if necessary. Organize your notes when you write your first draft, first you will have to work on organizing your notes first. During this process, you will be deciding which references you will be putting into your bibliography and that will work best as quotes in the text. You will be working on this more as you develop your work spins and see more examples of white paper to help you guide it through the process. Written his final rotation, he wrote a first and second draft and received corrections from his teacher. It's time to write your final copy. At this point, you should have seen an example of a research paper design and how to put together your role. You will have your title page, summary, introduction, thesis statement, text quotations, footnotes and full bibliography. Be sure to consult with your teacher to make sure that if you are writing in APA style, or if you are using another style guide. More information about questionnaireSwered.net QuestionsSwered.net
