Bodie is an import and has been with us as a loving family memberMariah A.Dewsbury, West Yorkshire Bullmastiffs are large dogs that were developed by crossbreeding two dogs with a division of 60 percent English Mastiffs and 40 percent old English Bull Dog.Bullmastiffs are large-sized dogs that were bred by English hunters as guard dogs for their estates. They have a broad head, solid build, and a dominating presence. These dogs got their size from the English Mastiffs that were large dogs but not aggressive enough. And they got their firm, agile & brave attitude from Bulldogs.The cost of buying a Bullmastiff puppy can vary from $1250 to $2500. Often you can find them at around $1600.There are many factors on which this may cary as below.Breeder Repute - The cost of buying a puppy from a reputable breeder would be higher. Lineage - The cost of puppies from known, healthy, and registered dogs would be higher.Health Tests - Some breeders would get the health tests done. More screening tests would mean a higher cost.Age - A puppy that is 2 months old would come at a higher cost than a puppy that is 6 months old.Sex - Female puppies tend to be at a slightly higher cost compared to females.Size: A full-grown English Bulldog Mastiff mix can grow to a height of 25 to 27 inches with a weight averaging around 110 to 130 pounds.Lifespan: They have a relatively short life expectancy of 8 to 10 years.English Bulldog Mastiff mix is a large-sized dog having a strong and muscular body. They must be trained and socialized with other humans and pets from the beginning.They learn the training commands quickly as they are quite intelligent.English Bulldog Mastiff mix also are independent thinkers. This may make training a bit difficult as they can become a bit obstinate. Firm, positive, and consistent training is required for them.English Bulldog Mastiff mix is generally a healthy breed but may suffer from some common dog health issues. It is important to screen the puppy with a vet before you adopt him. Some common ailments that they are prone to are:Cancer - Just like humans, cancer can develop in dogs as well. Bullmastiff is prone to lymphosarcoma, osteosarcoma, hemangiosarcoma, and mast cell tumors.Bloat - This is a life-threatening medical condition that large deep-chested dogs like English Bulldog Mastiff mixes are prone to. Dog parents must be aware of this so they know what is needed if an unfortunate situation happens.This is a condition when the stomach of the dog is distended with gas or air and then twists. The dog is not able to vomit the extra air and goes in shock due to the lowering of blood pressure. Immediate medical intervention is required.Care must be taken not to give one large meal and instead divide it into two or three meals in a day. Be vigilant that the dog is not eating rapidly. Do not give large volumes of water to drink after eating.Exercise just after eating should also be avoided. Feeding on a raised platform is best so the dog doesn't need to try bending down to eat. Hip Dysplasia - This is a medical condition which a dog can inherit. In this, the thigh bone doesn't fit properly into the hip joints.This is painful for dogs in varying degrees. It can sometimes get unnoticed until arthritis develops in old age. Dogs with hip dysplasia should be neutered as this can be passed onto dogs' offspring.Elbow Dysplasia - This is also a painful medical condition in the elbow joint.Hypothyroidism - This is a medical condition in which the thyroid hormone is not produced as required. Symptoms of this include bullmastiff coat becoming coarse and brittle.Aortic Stenosis - This is also an inheritable medical condition in which the defect in the aorta narrows the aortic valve to enable a smooth blood supply.Symptoms include dog feeling lethargic all the time and having instances of fainting. Again, as this is an inheritable condition, dogs having this should not be bred.Entropion - This is prone to wrinkle dogs. This is a medical condition when eyelids roll inwards and start to irritate. Surgery may be required for correcting this. If not treated, this may lead to blindness.Skin Allergies - English Bulldog Mastiff is prone to skin problems like rashes, sores, and irritations. They may also get skin infection easily. Keep an eye for any rashes on his skin.In a dog show in 1901, Mr. Burton of Thorneywood Kennels challenged that if anyone can escape the dog which he has brought, he will win a prize of Pound one, a good sum of money in those days.An experienced man took that challenge for some harsh consequences. Despite him being given a head start, he was chased and knocked down by the dog three times. This increased the popularity of the English Bulldog Mastiffs Sylvester Stallone adopted a Bullmastiff named Bulkus when he was six weeks old.ProConsRequire less maintenanceThough they don't shed much but drools a lot. Be prepared to clean the floor often.An excellent Guard dogprone to heat exhaustionBullmastiff was originally bred around the 1860's by mixing Old English Bulldog (now extinct) and English Mastiff to have the perfect large and courageous dog having the agility to catch the poachers.They soon became quite popular among the gamekeepers (professional hunters who used to play games and have dog shows) and were known as Gamekeeper's Night-Dog. Slowly poaching declined and they were started to be used as Guard dogs.In the early 20th century, they were started to be bred as a pure breed with the name of Bullmastiff. In 1924, England's Kennel Club recognized the breed.A few years later, the English Bulldog Mastiff mix was registered as a pure breed and named Bullmastiff in 1934 by the American Kennel Club (AKC). They currently rank 51 in the popularity list among the 195 registered dog breeds.Bullmastiff is a crossbreed of large English mastiffs and firm, agile old English Bulldogs. Let us also explore briefly about their parent breeds.English Mastiff or Mastiff are known for their massive size and muscular body. They can become larger than humans. Though great Danes can be slightly longer, Mastiffs like English Mastiffs can outdo them when it comes to size.They usually weigh around 150 to 250 pounds but few can reach up to a massive weight of 300 pounds or more. Thus they are not the dogs for the novice or first-time owners.Old English Bulldogs are extinct now. They used to be broad, agile, muscular, and confident dogs averaging around 15 inches in height. They were revered for the fights and frequently participated in the English blood sport of bull-baiting.With the passage of the Animal Cruelty bill in the year 1835 and crossbreeds with terrier and mastiffs becoming more popular this breed started to decline and eventually go extinct.Is Bullmastiff a good family dog?Bullmastiff is a gentle and good-natured dog.
