You can choose how to be notified when you get a message with Google Messages: You can pick from various notification settings like incoming messages, sound notifications, or even stop all notifications. To change these settings, tap on the three dots at the top right corner of the screen and select 'Settings'. In the Settings menu, you can toggle on/off options like "Incoming messages" to get notifications for every new message. If you don't want to be disturbed when sending messages, simply turn off "Hear outgoing message sounds". Want to customize settings for specific people? Learn how here. You can even change your default messaging app by opening the device's Settings app and selecting 'Apps' > 'Default apps' > 'SMS app'. If you need a larger font size or display, follow these steps: Open your device's Settings app and go to Accessibility > Text and display. Use the slider to adjust the font size or display size as needed.To send pictures, videos & audio files with Google Messages, you can change advanced settings like sending each file separately or automatically downloading them. To do this, open Google Messages and tap on your profile picture in the top right corner, then select 'Settings' > 'Advanced'. Turn on "Send an SMS reply to all recipients" for mass texting or auto-download files when data roams by turning on "Auto-download MMS when roaming".If you want conversations to be easily accessible with bubble notifications, open Google Messages and go to Settings > Bubbles. You can choose from options like getting notifications for all conversations, selected conversations, or nothing at all.For additional controls over notifications, blocking & group messages, open a conversation in Google Messages, tap on the three dots at the top right corner and select 'Details' or 'More Group details'. You can turn off message notifications, get priority notifications, block messages from specific numbers or groups, or even add people to the conversation.To keep conversations private, you can turn off link previews for websites in Google Messages by opening Settings > Automatic previews. Additionally, if you're using an Android 10 device and above, you can toggle on/off the dark theme under Display & touch settings.Lastly, learn how to change your default search engine on a browser like Google Chrome or Microsoft Edge, but be aware that these steps only work for those browsers.To set up Google as your default search provider on various browsers and devices, follow these steps:Open Internet Explorer and click on the down arrow in the top right corner of the browser. Click Find More Providers and then select Google. Check the box next to Make this my default search provider and click Manage Search Providers. Then, click Add.Alternatively, open Firefox and click Search in the top right corner of the browser. Change Search Settings and select Google as your default search engine.For Safari, click on the magnifying glass in the left corner of the search bar and select Google.On Android devices, tap Menu button > Settings > Advanced > Set search engine and choose Google. You can also use the Search widget feature by opening the Google app, tapping Settings, and switching to Google.
