Take a trip down memory lane that'll make you feel nostalgia AF It's time to return to Pride Rock, and after 25 years, Simba's home has never looked more spectacular. The animated version of The Lion King debuted in 1994 and put a ton of magic into our lives and childhoods. Now, the father/son story about love, loss, and friendship is about to get a stunning live-action retelling. The 21st-century version of The Lion King is set to debut on July 19, 2019, and it's going to be glorious. This time, director Jon Favreau is set to bring the beloved tale to life with Donald Glover as Simba, Beyoncé as Nala, James Earl Jones reprising his role as Mufasa, Chiwetel Ejiofor as Scar, Billy Eichner as Timon, and Seth Rogen as Pumbaa. Though we were nervous about the film at first, knowing that Favreau was the genius behind 2016's live-action The Jungle Book and seeing the gorgeous trailer quieted many of our concerns. Still, looking at the immense scope of the film and its all-star cast, how much did the live-action Lion King cost to make? A $250 million extravaganza Though the budget for the live-action The Lion King hasn't officially been confirmed, Marvel Studios boss, Kevin Feige let it slip that the movie would have a $250 million budget and it looks like every penny was well spent. Not only did Disney have to get the animation and music just right, but they also had to be able to afford Beyoncé, which we're sure was a costly penny. The original animated classic only cost Disney $45 million, and it made almost $1 billion back in the box office across the globe. The Lion King's budget also gives Favreau a bit more to play with than he had for The Jungle Book which was budgeted at $177 million. #TheLionKing. 2019. pic.twitter.com/UMJo18FwDt — Disney (@Disney) November 1, 2017 Disney's most expensive film of 2019 Despite its massive budget, The Lion King will not be Disney's most expensive film of the year. That honor goes to Avengers: Endgame which will debut April 26, 2019. The final installment in the Avengers saga cost Disney $350 million to get to the big screen. It is set to be Disney's most expensive film of all time. Before this, the studios' most expensive live-action film was Pirates of the Caribbean: At World's End which had a $300 million budget. Meanwhile, their most costly animated feature was Tangled which cost the studio, $260 million. This year, Disney's most costly animated features are Frozen 2 which will premiere November 22, 2019, and Toy Story 4 which will debut, June 21, 2019. The films both have budgets of $200 million –which isn't quite as costly as The Lion King but about almost as budget busting. Disney has a ton of films coming down the pipeline this year, but we'd have to say we're most excited the little lion who just can't wait to be king. Check out The Cheat Sheet on Facebook! Downloading movies is a straightforward process that's easy for anyone to tackle, but you should be aware of a number of components before starting. You want to make sure your computer is prepared for the download, that you have the right software, and that you're downloading the right kind of movies. Downloading is not the same as streaming. Knowing the difference between downloading and streaming might save you lots of time, and there are important benefits and disadvantages to both. One of the most important things to remember when downloading movies is that they might be really large. Although it's common for movie downloads to stay under 5 GB, some of the super high-definition videos might require 20 GB of space or more. For reference, most newer hard drives come with 500 to 1,000 GB of space. Before downloading a movie, check that you have enough free space. One easy way to see which files are hogging all the storage is to use a disk space analyzer. If you can't move any existing files off of the primary hard drive or delete anything to free up space, you might end up having to store the movie on a different hard drive like a flash drive or external hard drive. Since movies are some of the largest files you can download, they take much longer to save to your computer than a regular file like a song or image. One way to make sure your entire network doesn't slow down in the process is to use a download manager, especially one that supports bandwidth control. Download managers are helpful not only in categorizing and storing downloads but also for limiting how much bandwidth the downloads are allowed to use. Since movies usually take a while to fully download, they tend to suck away bandwidth from other devices on your network in the meantime. If, while downloading movies, other devices on your network are slowing down, videos are buffering, and there's a general sense of lag, configure the download manager to limit the downloads so that they can only use a fraction of all the available bandwidth, like 10 percent or 20 percent. It's also possible that your internet connection simply doesn't support fast downloads. For example, if you pay your ISP for a 2 MB/s download speed, you can download a 3 GB movie in around 25 minutes. If you want to be able to save a movie of the same size in just five minutes, your network must support speeds as fast as 10 MB/s. You can test your internet speed to make sure you're actually getting what you're paying for. Movies downloaded through torrent websites have a high risk of adding malware to your computer. Make sure your computer is secure with an antivirus program to catch any threats before they can do damage, and always do regular scans to check for malware. In addition to anti-malware software, it's important to educate yourself on how to spot a fake torrent or fake download website. Fake movie downloads will attach a nonvideo format file extension like .EXE or .MSI at the very end of the file to trick you into opening a program instead of a video. Normal video files usually end with .MP4, .AVI, .MKV, or .MOV. Another component to watch out for when downloading movies is the size of the file. If it's too small, like less than 300 MB, then the video is probably not real. Most movies are much larger than 300 MB and usually end up falling in the range of 700 MB to 5 GB. It's common to download a movie and then not know how to open it. Some movies are in a file format that no program on your computer knows how to open. Fortunately, you can pick from plenty of absolutely free video players that will support the movie format. One of the most popular freeware video file players is VLC. You can use it to play common video file formats like MP4 and AVI, plus others like MKV, MOV, WMV, and many others. Stick to this program if you're ever unsure how to play the movie you've downloaded. Some movie downloads are 100 percent fake and will try to convince you that you have to install their special software program in order to see the video. They might even start showing the beginning of the movie and then stop and display a message about how you don't have the right program installed. Unfortunately, those kinds of videos are not real videos at all. They're made for the sole purpose of tricking you into thinking that if you buy this or that, or click a certain link, the movie will suddenly start playing. It's tempting to try to follow the directions and activate the movie, but remember that they are not real; the movie does not really exist in that file. Ignore those messages, delete the video, and try getting the movie elsewhere, preferably through a more reputable movie download website. Thanks for letting us know! Tell us why! Lions are considered to be the king of the jungle due to their size, strength and numbers and because they don't fear any other animal. This can be somewhat misleading since lions don't actually live in jungles. Lions have no natural predators. Occasionally, they will come into contact with hyenas and because both animals eat the same foods, fights can take place. In the rare event a pack of hyenas can take down a lion, they will eat it. Otherwise, the two groups of animals keep their distance from one another. Lions maintain order within the pride the way a king maintains order within the boundaries of his kingdom. Like a king, lions keep strict control on their pride and the land in which they are in control. Lions will fight to the death to protect their territory. Disney's "The Lion King" was written by Irene Mecchi, Jonathan Roberts and Linda Woolverton. These writers have also been involved in the writing of several other animated features, either with Disney or other studios. Mecchi helped to adapt "The Lion King" for Broadway and to adapt the musical "Annie" for television. Irene Mecchi, who has written for print media and television as well as for film and stage, is also credited for her writing work on Disney's feature films "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Hercules" and "Brave." She was educated in theater at the University of California, Berkeley, and the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco.Among Jonathan Roberts' screenwriting credits beyond "The Lion King" is his work on Triggerfish Animation Studios' "Khumba," which was also set in Africa and followed the story of talking animals.Of the three writers who worked on "The Lion King," Linda Woolverton has been the most engaged in Disney features. She has been credited as a writer on "Maleficent," the "Sleeping Beauty" reboot, 2010's "Alice in Wonderland," "Mulan" and "Beauty and the Beast." She has claimed that she wrote the character of Belle for "Beauty and the Beast" as a break from the more passive Disney princess embodied by Ariel of "The Little Mermaid." This progression continued through her later work on Nala in "The Lion King" and the characters of Mulan and Alice.
