Perfectionists are often reminded that perfection is a myth. Turns out there's another reason why you should not try creating perfection in our working days. Saying the word done can be accomplished on your to-do list. It's all about the timing of the words. The words are also used in a psychological experiment. The words are also used in a psychological experiment. The words are also used in a psychological experiment. But the most common way we're using them is with something, the electrical activity in our brain shifts and engaged into a more relaxed state. That relaxed state seems very similar to meditative or individuals who practice awareness awareness awareness. A neurochemical change in the brain occurs simultaneously. Serotonin, known as the "body chemical", is released, creating a sense of calm and satisfaction. This new relaxed state allows us to take on the next task and builds our confidence. The more often you complete a task, the greater the confidence you create to reach the next item on your to-do list, allowing you to tackle even more challenging tasks. A! What we want to do if we want to prepare ourselves to increase productivity is to face smaller or smaller challenges, so we build that moment "done", Sherlin says. How to create more opportunities to say "Done": Break tasks into smaller pieces Productivity has a snowball effect. "When you start taking steps and create a complete moment, you increase your confidence and your momentum to move forward", says Sherlin. While a transaction like "making taxes" may seem overwhelming, breaking it down into various steps that are easy to do "such as collecting receipts and bank statements" not only makes the transaction more manageable, but also creates more opportunities to say "done". Choose an operation and set a timer for 10 minutes. Do as much as you can during this time without distractions. When the timer turns off, say "done" and then select the next step to perform, setting the timer again. Visualize yourself to complete the operation. Imagine completing the operation. "Even if we haven't reached the stage yet, imagining that stage has been completed creates momentum and motivation, which allows us to get there much faster", says Sherlin. Take microbreaks Create opportunities to take microbreaks throughout the day. Going for a walk, having a coffee, or calling a family member or friend allows the brain to reset so that you can get back to the task at hand more energetically. Study spelling rules and commonly misspelled words, then test your spelling skills by completing the following short exercises. In some cases, you will need to add one or two letters to complete the correct spelling of each word in parentheses. In other cases, the words in brackets are correct just as it is. When you're done, compare your answers with the answers below. Some words are misspelled on purpose.
