Lab 14 Mendelian Genetics

Learning Objectives

- Explain how Mendel's work formed the foundation of modern genetics including the use of segregation and the law of independent assortment
- Assess genes to homozygous, heterozygous, dominant alleles, recessive alleles, genotype and phenotype
- Use monohybrid and dihybrid crosses to analyze patterns of inheritance including incomplete dominance and co-dominance

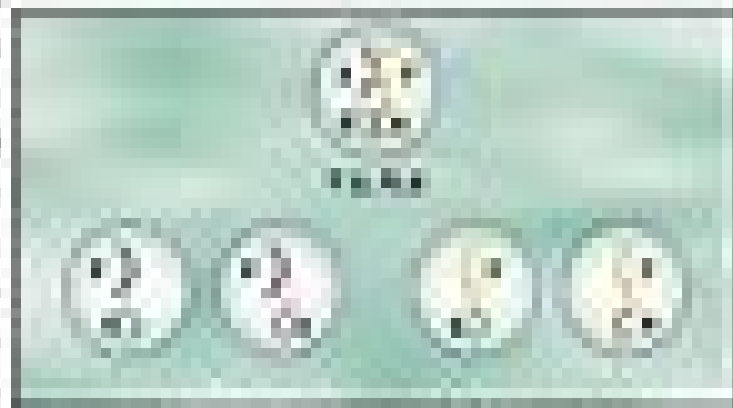

1000

In 1955, George Mendel (or August Mendel) published a paper entitled "Experiments in Plant Hybridization". It was largely ignored until 1992, when it was "rediscovered" and subsequently became the basis for what we now refer to as Mendelian Genetics. Mendel was the first to recognize

- inherited characteristics are determined by specific factors (now recognized as genes)
- These factors (now 2-part chromosomes) are genes
- Other families have these factors segregated so that each parent contains only one.

The Loss of Independent Assessment

These original observations lead to what we now refer to as The law of segregation and the law of independent assortment. The law of segregation states that during meiosis, for homologous (paired) chromosomes split. The law of independent assortment states that during meiosis, each homologous chromosome has an equal chance of ending up in either gamete and states that individual genes segregate with the chromosomes on which they are located (Figure 5). The law of independent assortment allows for genetic recombination. The first breeding experiment can be used to determine the total number of possible genotype combinations for any particular number of genes.

² P = Number of possible genotype combinations (where P is the number of genes)

- ☐ 1 parva, $2^2 = 4$ genotypes
- ☐ 2 parva, $2^2 = 4$ genotypes
- ☐ 3 parva, $2^2 = 4$ genotypes
