By Shelley Frost Updated on June 30, 2018 Design clothes for a living sound like every fashionista dream job, but much more goes into work than selecting samples or understanding which colors are okay together. Fashion designers must keep up with trends, and oversee the process from design concept to production. If you are creative and have an eye for fashion, this career choice can be your dream job. The primary work of a fashion designer is to create designs for clothes, accessories and shoes. Understanding current trends is an important aspect of this process. Usually drawings start with sketches that capture all the details of the design. Many designers use computer-aided design programs for the design process. Fashion designers then create a prototype before the piece goes into production. This prototype uses all selected fabrics and ornaments during the design process. It is also necessary to communicate the instructions to those who actually make the products to ensure that finished designs are as they had originally imagined them. It often takes months to get a design at the final stage of production. In addition to your real design work, you can spend time going to fashion shows and fairs to get ideas or to share your own designs. Also common travel for suppliers to see fabrics and other materials. Designers can be responsible for marketing their lines to retailers. Although not required, a degree is common among designers. Fashion design and fashion merchandising are two popular majors in the field. You will also need to learn how to use computer-aided design programs, which is often part of the curriculum in a fashion degree program. Many programs require sketches, design samples, wallets orconcrete examples of your work. Fashion designers can work for clothing manufacturers to design the lines they produce. Many fashion jobs are located in California or New York, so to land a job with a great fashion fashionYou may need to move. you can also wait to travel regularly to visit suppliers or go to fashion shows and fashion shows. expect to work long hours when you have a production deadline or a fashion show approaching. Other designers choose to work for themselves. in this role, you could create custom pieces for customers or you could make your own designs that you sell online. this option gives you more freedom to design the clothes you want, but you do not get a constant paycheck, and you need to promote yourself. Many independent designers start their business from home, and can expand into a small business space while their business grows. Fashion designers can land jobs outside college. having an impressive portfolio of clothing, accessories or footwear you have already designed can help you quickly land a job, especially because the field is very competitive. fashion designers earn a mid-range salary of $67,420 a year, starting in 2017. The average salary means that of all designers, half do less a year and half do more a year. 10 percent lower make $33,910 a year, while 90 percent higher make $135,490. This leaves a lot of room for you to grow your salary, the longer you are in the field. the growth of employment opportunities for fashion designers is expected to be slower than the average, only 3 percent between 2016 and 2026. international fashion production is a factor in slower growth in this field. Mass retailers are starting to focus more on selling affordable fashionable clothes, which helped the growth of work in the industry. from tom gresham updated on 07 March 2019 the works of fashion designers and costume designers involve every design of clothing. the main difference between costume and designfashion is the public served. fashion designers create commercial pieces that will be sold and worn by the general public, while costume designers are specialists that provide interesting pieces for actors and actresses to wearTV shows and movies, among other productions. Fashion designers typically work for retailers or clothing companies, but some are self-employed and contribute to multiple customers projects. Fashion designer design a range of types of clothing, including clothing, footwear and accessories. Some designers specialize in a particular type of clothing, such as bags, or a particular market, such as children's or luxury clothing. Fashion designers tend to create collections of pieces that are presented in seasonal shops. First, they create a concept design for each piece of the collection and select fabrics and finishes. Then they work with other team members to create design samples that are used in production. Some designers also supervise the production of seasonal runways that debut their projects. Costume designers can work for a theatrical company or TV show, but many are freelancers who take work on a productive basis for production. They work with a creative team of a production to settle for a theme for costumes, then create drawings that reflect the traits of each character and other components of production, incorporating the theme. The drawings must take into account the production budget for materials and labour in costume. Both fashion designers and costume designers create unique and original designs, but each has constraints. Fashion designers must pay attention to the needs of the retail market and come with designs they sell. Designer costumes often have to replicate a specific historical period or create functional designs, such as dance dancers or ice skaters. In addition, costumers often have to work with existing pieces purchased or rented for a production rather than original designs. An academic background in the field is not necessary for a career either in fashion design or inof the costume. However, a specific university education for the field can provide a head start both in fashion design and costume design, improving perspectivespotential employers. Neither field requires any license or certification. In both career paths, designers will often serve an apprentice period, working under more experienced designers to help them realize their designs. The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistic reports that the median salary for fashion designers was $67,420 in 2017. This is the wage in which half the designers earned more and half earned less. Designers who work in the photo of the movement and video industries had an average salary of $75,470, while those in clothing production earned $66,400. Employment in fashion design in the United States is expected to grow by 3 percent between 2016 and 2026 due to international clothing production. The screenings for costumers are not available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.
