The raiders (1st brigade) lead the way the 1st Brigade combat team arrived in Kuwait, uncertain of what the future held, with many questions still to answer. Their mission was simple "discourages Iraq i aggression in the region. In March, following countless training exercises in the Kuwaiti desert and an ultimatum to Saddam Hussein by our commander in chief, the future seemed clear. On the night of March 20th, the questions answered. LED by Task Force 3/69 Armor, the Raiders crossed the border in Iraq About eight P.M. and started their march towards Baghdad. In four days, time, the 1st BCT crossed the border, fixed an airport, called thirty hours and travelled to 300 kilometers. For the next eight days, the Raiders organized operations from a assembly area northwest of a Najaf. From the 25th of March, during a sandstorm that led to a 25-metre visibility, the brigade recall team and the elements of the TF 3/69 armor and the infantry TF 3/7 fought around the clock with regular and unconventional Iraqi troops in Al Kifl a northern suburb of a Najaf on the Euphrates River. On April 9th, Saddam Hussein's regime officially collapsed when Baghdad fell to coalition forces led by the third infantry division (mechanised). When President George W. Bush declared the end of the main combat operations in Iraq, the Raiders had already been in stabilisation and support operations for two weeks. Spartans (2nd Brigade) is the abstention of the Spartan decision, the decision, assertiveness and abilities during the operation Iraqi freedom began immediately after President George W. Bush confronted the Americans and the world of March 17th 2003 and gave Saddam Hussein 48-hour exit from Iraq. Spartan soldiers had their first significant enemy contact 23 March. From March 23rd to March 25th, the brigade fought Fedayeen's forces as they attacked the Ram targets. Having set this objective in order to facilitate the occupation by division and support elements of the Corps, the Brigade continued to advance the north to Spartan targets through Weapons, rocket grenades and indirect fire from conventional and irregular forces which, although sometimes supported, were largely uncoordinated. "Thunder Runs", fast travel from Saints to Baghdad International Airport, starting April 5. On April 7, the Spartans attacked Baghdad. A few days later, the main combat operations ended. Sledgehammers (3rd Brigade) Providing support After spending most of the previous year in Kuwait, the 3rd Brigade Combat Team raced through southern Iraq to capture the first targets of the 3rd Infantry Division at Tallil Air Base on March 21. The brigade followed the 1st Combat Team Brigade through the lanes separating Kuwait from Iraq before the 2nd Battalion, the 69th Armor Regiment, the 1st Battalion, the 15th Infantry Regiment and the 1st Battalion, the 30th Infantry Regiment attacked Firebird targets, C Lay and Liberty, which consisted of the airbase and bridges in the immediate vicinity. Once the targets were secured, the brigade allowed the rest of the division to pass through it and head for As Samawah. They defended several bridges and prevented Iraqi reinforcements from entering the city while 2nd BCT conducted the Thunder Run on April 7. The brigade fought several Iraqi counterattacks, including an attack on the Tactical Operations Centre, during 6 and 7 April. The brigade was supported throughout the war by the 203rd Main Support Battalion, which ensured that the troops on the front line received the necessary food and supplies. The Vanguards (4th Brigade) Completing the Mission The helicopters of the 4th Brigade were with the division all the way, providing close air support, reconnaissance, resupply and emergency evacuation to the division's advanced combat assets. The Vanguard mission began as soon as the Division crossed the international boundary between Kuwait and Iraq. The AH-64 Apache Longbows f towards the ground units of the division to observe the incoming artillery fire on Iraqi outposts the border. After the final artillery fire, the Apache advanced and destroyed all the surviving targets at the initial dam. The Apache continued to provide air support during the push towards Baghdad, providing essential support in the battles for As Samawah, Objective Peach and Baghdad. But they were not the only contribution of the 4th Brigade to the struggle. The UH-60 Blackhawks of the 2nd Battalion, 3rd Airborne Regiment and 507th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) carried out almost constant missions to move the victims from the front to the medical units in the back. Only the 507th carried out 19 missions in the first 24-hour war. The Blackhawks of the brigade also served as command and control platforms for Major General Buford C. Blount III, division commander. All helicopters were maintained in operation with ammunition and refueling points set up throughout the theatre by the 603rd Aviation Support Battalion. Beans and bullets Without beans and bullets, the Third Infantry Division could not have fought until Baghdad. Without fuel, food, ammunition, spare parts and other classes of supply, there would have been no war. The rear element of the division followed the main division in Iraq to provide these supplies. The forward support battalions transported the supplies from the logistics base to the combat units, ensuring that the Marne warriors had what they needed to fight. Division Support Command included the DREAR, along with the 24th Corps Support Group. The DISCOM mission is to support brigade combat teams, bringing logistics from V Corps to BCT. The 24th mission of the CSG consisted mainly in supporting non-divisive customers in the operational areas of the 3rd Infantry Division, but also in increasing DISCOM support for 3rd Division soldiers DREAR, which also included many annexed units, supported the division into different forms, from the fuel factories'50 000 litre fuel bag fields, set up in each position to provide bulk fuel for the units' water purification Repair of the vehicle, meals, ready to eat and heat and serve meals, forecast packages and parts for damaged equipment. Also with DREAR there were units of psychological operations that broadcast a radio station from every location, the soldiers of civil affairs who interacted and helped Iraqi civilians, the 1st Battalion, the 3rd Avengers Air Defense Artillery to provide greater security and disposal teams of explosive devices. Wherever the division went, Drear was behind it, supplying the vital lymph that needed to sustain the struggle. The ma in fighting operations were over, but the city of Baghdad, on whose roads the war was waged, was in a state of rebirth less than two months after the third division of infantry (mechanized) for the first time its tanks and Bradleys in the capital Iraq. Its citizens were still trying to get back on their feet, and the coalition army was there to help. After the fighting, the soldiers moved the fire to support and stabilization operations in an attempt to rebuild the country devastated by the war. The soldiers led foot patrols and patrols mounted in every sector of the city, scanning the streets for signs of danger. They had also fixed sendies outside many gas stations and mosques that maintain peace. They've arrested looters, curfew switches, citizens with guns and citizens drunk and disorderly. But their job wasn't just to be a local cop. They also spent much of their reconstruction time. The soldiers helped to restructure and reopen schools, hospitals, football fields, zoos and even amusement parks. They've distributed hundreds of soccer balls, school supplies, air conditioners, fans, medical supplies and thousands of gallons of propane fuel. They met with the and imams in every neighborhood, to determine what was best for its inhabitants. They also helped restore power and water in many neighborhoods. Neighborhood of the Task Force, a community improvement program of V Corps, along with Iraqi citizens, clean basket and debris from neighborhoods and stadiums that were damagedDuring the war and later, when the looters escaped rampant in Baghdad. The transition from war time to maintaining peace was not easy for many of the soldiers. Á ¢ ¢,~ "First, almost all those you saw wanted to give you corporal damage, Á ¢ ¢,~" said SGT. 1st class Dwayne Anderson, 1 Á ¢ Battalion, 41 Á ¢ Artillery field Incendial non-commissioned incial assistance. Á ¢ ¢,~ "Now see people who wave and offer your cigarettes Á ¢ ¢,~ | This is an extremely hard transition. It is one of Anderson's soldiers, SGT. Daniel Nardy, added, Á ¢ ¢,~ "It is rather to do it rather than fighting a war. War".
