Oklahoma's Illinois River Information provided by Brook of Oklahoma Fly Fishing The picturesque Illinois River is located near Tahlequah Oklahoma serpeggiante through the eastern Oklahoma Cookson Hills. The river is well known and thought mainly as a canoe river. The waters of the stream begin in Arkansas and flow through low mountains, hills and valleys for 68 miles before entering Lake Tenkiller. The usable part of the river is generally accepted as a start at the Lake Frances dam near Watts Oklahoma. The Illinois River is a wild and panoramic stream left in its natural state for enjoying recreational and wildlife enthusiasts. During the summer months the stream is heavily routed by canoists. It is generally a class II river under normal flow conditions. The water of the stream is known to be clear to almost clear with a pebble bed and rock of the stream. Some sanding occurs in the water mills back to the deepest holes of water. Rocks and rocks are sporadically scattered along the length of the stream. In the upper part from 1/2 to 1/3 of the river, steep cliffs, protrusions and a rock bed stream is common. The stream has numerous trees that have been immersed or fallen into the stream in different areas. The roots and trunks of these trees create an excellent coverage for fish as well as a moderate danger for canoists. The stream has many gravel bars throughout its length with moderately long holes of variable depth between the buckets. The creek is better fished by canoe or John boat bottom plate. The fishing of the saber in several access points is possible. However, the amount of water that can be covered in these access points is often limited due to deep waters upstream and downstream of such areas. Most public access points will host a hundred meters or more upstream and downstream for fishing with swabs. However, during the summer months most of these areas are populated by bathers, swimmers, beach canoes and floaters carrying their customers to the stream. Floating the river and beaching at the probable points along the length of the rivers provides greater access to the productive water and much more enjoyment of the river and your fly fishing trip. "The canoe door" can be a problem for the fly fisherman during the summer months. In a typical hot summer day, hundreds of canoists and beams will be on the river. Weekends are very crowded sometimes. The best time to fish in the river is during weekdays and early morning and late evening. If you use one of the commercial canoes along the river, the upper part of the river (upstream of Chewey Bridge to Round Hollow) receives less canoes than the central and lower part of the river. Riverside Floats, one of the latest commercial Outfitters intraditionally manages this stretch of the river when the water level allows it. A fourteen-mile and seven-mile float is available with put-in upstream of Chewey Bridge or at the bridge for the seven-mile journey. The pickup point is at the Round Round Public access. To get away completely from the traffic of the canoes in summer, it is necessary to travel further upstream. The Watts community near the Arkansas - Oklahoma State line has one or two canoe outfitters located in the area. This far superior stretch is floating without problems, except during very low water flows in the heat of summer. This upper section is slightly fished with many areas probably not fished at all. The length of the river (68 miles) makes it the idea for multi-day floating and camping overnight. However, if you choose to camp on the river, be very aware of the time at all times. Also moderate rainfall upstream can cause the rise of the river several feet very quickly. There are over 70 species of fish in the river. Smallmouth Bass, Black Bass, Channel Catfish, Sunfish and Perch are the largest "catchable" species. During the first spring of the year, Sandbass migrates to the bottom of the river from Tenkiller Lake on the deposition tracks. Primary food sources for fish include crawdads, fish, infermite, sweatshirts and Madtom (black fish). These black catfish are small (one to three inches long), black coal, miniature catfish that dig in the gravel in the bottoms. Smallmouth and Black Bass are "thankful" on these delicacies and a large black weight wool bugger or other imitation can be very productive. There are nine large public access points along the river length with several other accessible points by canoe crew along the river. Access is also possible at low water bridges crosses at the top of the river. The following main access points, not including canoe kitters along the river, are listed by miles of the river downstream from Lake Frances Dam near Watts Oklahoma. The state of Prairie cannot bring to mind visions of fishing docks, rather you could imagine the crowded streets of Chicago and miles of driving only to get from top to bottom, but surprisingly enough the state has a lot of action to offer flying fishermen. While most people associate Lake Michigan with Illinois, there are also 87,000 kilometers of streams and rivers and dozens of beautiful lakes scattered throughout the landscape. These waters serve as the seat of a wide range of fishes, including largemouth bass and largemouth bass, bluegill, Coho salmon, lake trout, rainbow trout, and more. While there is certainly nothing wrong to stay up for the urban experience, trying your luck on the shores of Lake Michigan, you will be rewarded traveling a bit away from the big city and looking for the fishing opportunities of the Illinois fight further inland. An annual residency license can be purchased for $15, while a non-resident will pay $31.50. If you want to fish for trout, you'll also need a trout stamp, available for residents and non-residents for $6.50. A Lake Michigan salmon stamp can also be obtained for $6.50. Children under the age of 16 do not need a fishing license in Illinois and seniors receive a 50% discount. Active military members who are state residents and on active implemented service leave may fish without a licence. Member States may impose size and quantity limits on fish, in addition to designating catch and release areas and/or time periods for different watercourses. Illinois is no different, and the best thing is to know yourself with the regulations so that be assured that you have insured that you are angling within the bounds of state law. While the complexity of the language may seem daunting, simply search for the document with the location where you plan to fish and the type of fish to angling, and you might be able to efficiently locate exactly what rules you need to follow.Trip PlanIllinois is not your traditional, fly fishing book for textbooks, but what can work work Your advantage, because with the large number of rivers, streams and lakes, and the abundance of public access throughout the state, you can observe your little jewel without being crowded by other fly fishermen. Do not forget to visit some of the lesser known torrents and retention basins. With such a wide choice of water bodies scattered throughout the state, it is impossible to cover every single area that could give good fishing results with the fly. Despite the lack of a trout fishing, as happens in other states, there is an active community of fly fishermen, who are generally more than willing to offer advice through online forums and in the "real life" to those who need a little guidance in the right direction. Time to grab your rod and check out one of the dozens of rivers and lakes in Illinois for a certain unique fly fishing action. action.
